Press Report.

We have made arrangements and put up the necessary money to take the press report as given to the Buffalo Chieftain, commencing on the first of March; but the telegraph company has fallen into difficulties in Colorado and we are advised by Mr. Armstrong the superintendent, that the service will not begin for two or three days yet until they get other arrangements perfected for the transmission of news since Jay Gould stopped in and aggressively cut their Denver wires.

There must be less killing. Human life is sacred and it must be held so and trifling causes will not be considered a justification for taking human life. The best citizens of Las Vegas will hereafter take a determined stand in reference to this shooting business. These men are opposed to lynching under any circumstances, but they propose to take legal methods, to bring to the notice of the authorities and the courts the deaths which may hereafter occur and inquire minutely into their causes. This is a simple statement of a fact, that the unbroken current in this direction has been growing stronger steadily and is now ready to assert itself in a manner to be felt. Killing is too frequent and not only a terrible wrong of itself, but is having a widespread and injurious effect upon the community. The sentiment is to not quietly let the law take its course, but to make the law an active and energetic agent in rooting out crime and the causes of the death of people. Las Vegas must be made a city where people can come and reside with perfect safety and security.

We are glad to note the improved sentiment in the community against lynching. It is a system of administering justice which is dangerous to countenance. It breeds hardness and recklessness into men which leads to excesses. It cannot be justified under any circumstances and the feelings of the best men of the community are decidedly against it. Let the law take its course with criminals and at work to make the punishment of offenders certain. We believe that the sentiment of this community favors legal methods provided they result in speedy justice. James Allen shot and killed James A. Morehead at the very beginning of court. The vigilantes, it is to be presumed, in deference to the sentiment against lynching and the presence of the District Court, have properly enough stood back. That is as it should be, but the court must now take hold of the subject vigilantly or else the public will not be satisfied.

In Memoriam.

WHEREAS, In the dispensation of an all-wise Providence our worthy brother, R. B. Kincaide, has by death been removed from among us, and from the scenes of his usefulness, therefore be it

Resolved, That we, his late associates and friends have ever held him in the highest esteem for the uniform gentle deportment which has marked his intercourse with his brethren and fellow-citizens at large.

Resolved, That in his death Union Lodge has lost one of its friends, the institution of Masonry one of its most valuable members, society a general and pleasant companion and friend.

Resolved, That we tender to his afflicted family and relatives our warmest sympathy and our tender regards in this their sad bereavement.

Resolved, That the Lodge be draped in mourning for thirty days, and we in token of grief at the loss of our departed brother will wear the usual badge of mourning for the same time, and that the secretary shall furnish a copy of these resolutions to the family of our deceased brother and to the editor of the Las Vegas GAZETTE.

Poultry.

There is nothing that pays better according to the capital required than the poultry business. But to be successful in this, as in other business a certain amount of knowledge of the care and habits of the birds is absolutely necessary. In California poultry is more subject to disease than in the Eastern States, but three-fourths of the loss is occasioned from inattention and want of care. Cleanliness is an essential thing in the care of poultry. The hen house should be frequently cleaned out and the roost washed with lime-water, sulphur and carbolic acid or kerosene. Nests should be frequently cleaned out, the old straw burned and fresh supplied. In the fall of the year a little mustard should be put in their drink, and when it is convenient the water should be kept in an iron vessel, and it is a good plan to keep in the water some pieces of iron. Occasionally change their feed, and always supply them with plenty of green feed. No matter what the breed, well-cared for fowls will surely pay. But, of course, we would urge the advantage of keeping the best breeds.—Exchange.

Bitter Thirty-Four Years Old.

It is just thirty-four years since a large creek of butter was suspended by a rope in the well on the farm of Abraham S. Mylin, of Willow street. This old custom was a good one for keeping the butter fresh, but this particular lot was destined never to be eaten. For the rope broke and for thirty-four years it has rested securely in the bottom of the well. One day last week the well was cleaned and the butter again brought to light. It was found to be in excellent condition as far as appearance. It will not be eaten but will be kept as a relic, and it certainly is one of the most peculiar articles in existence.—Chaff & Times.

A Miller of Germany, who lived in the time of Frederick the Great, was in 1779 buried alive by the withdrawal of the head waters of his mill stream by a neighbouring baron who directed the water into his private fishpond. The judges before whom an appeal of the master was tried, decided against the master. Frederick the Great, on hearing of his decision, sentenced the judges to a month's imprisonment, and passed a decree that "prince and peasant alike before the law." The one hundred and fourth anniversary of this event was recently celebrated at Berlin.

The first American patent for an invention was issued to Samuel Hopkins, at New York, July 31, 1791, for an "improved process" for making potash and pearlash. The original document, written on parchment, signed by George Washington and certified by Thomas Jefferson, is now in the hands of a Columbus, Ohio, gentleman. Congress has been advised to appropriate $500 for the purchase of the document as a relic for preservation.

Our Minister to Berlin, relates that when he was at St. Petersburg he visited, in company with the late Col. Colt, of Hartford, and the superintendent of his works, the Imperial Museum, where the relics of Peter the Great are kept. When they examined Peter's turning lathe, Col. Colt exclaimed in language most emphatic, "—here is the principle of the Blanchard turning lathe anticipated by nearly 200 years!"

The Denver papers are getting in the same boat with the rest of us, getting short of news. The dispatches no longer go over the wire to Santa Fe and there promises to be a short season of quietude.

Domestic.

REV. W. H. BEECHER.

That mother's heart went quickly up, That mother's hand went down, For he was placed exactly right To feel a parent's frown;

And she did smite him hip and thigh, She did the work up brown.

His inclination then she changed To forty-five degrees—

He saw the stars from heaven fall; Fierce lightning smote the trees!

And traveled up and down his spine Along with swarms of bees.

The thoughts of that wretched cracking chair

Nerved up her hand once more,

And such a laying on of hands!

That boy never felt before,

He yelled "O! Mother, I'll be good And do no more!"

Between two and three thousand workers in various branches of trade in New York are now on a strike. Although there is a general agitation for an increase of wages and a meeting of all the trades unions in the city about to be held to consider the matter, the men now out are not anxious on that account. There is great discontent complain of in the wage of pay as the employers have been increasing the pay of their men from time to time, as business would warrant. The strikes, as usual, are at about the methods of employment, and several hundred men from a single institution refuse to work because the proprietors refuse to have incompetent workmen forced upon them. Men who strike for such reasons can hardly expect to get much benefit from prosperous times—all employers have more or less prejudice against unfit workmen and are likely to make a discrimination. Such a course ought also to command itself to employers as it protects them in their position against cheap rivals.

Thomas A. Edison's daily routine of life is to spend the time from 10 a.m. till 2 p.m. in attending, first, with his private secretary, to his correspondence, and then in a personal round of the numerous partners, pamphlets and books that come to him daily from all parts of the world.

After 2 p.m. he examines the work of his assistants, performed in his absence, holds consultation with his chief assistant, Mr. Batchelor, and then commences the experiments upon his own devises and the suggestions of others, which continue into the night, with only intervals for meals, till he and all his assistants are exhausted, and each retires to his bed, after generally giving in about 4 a.m., when he selects some favorite spot, and, with his coat for a pillow, sleeps soundly—till he wakes up. At least, this is the account by the reporters, though why the poor wizard can not be induced in a pillow and a sensible modicum of rest, is what no one can find out." At present, the papers state that he is five feet ten inches in height, weighs 185 pounds, and is the picture of good health.

Adolph Real has a stock ranch on the Martinez, ten miles east of San Antonio, Texas. Mr. Real has a five-year-old son whose name is Emil. Three days ago Emil, accompanied by his dog, went into the timber on the creek, hunting cotton-tail rabbits. In a short time, the little dog chased a rabbit into a hollow tree and sat down at the hole to intercept his master by barking. When Emil arrived at the tree, he pushed himself into the hollow, but, instead of going into the hole, with drew it, seeing in the last joint of his index finger the unmistakable wounds of the fangs of a rattlesnake. The child did not fly shrieking, but at once drew out his jack-knife and splitting the end of his finger continued sucking it until nearly all the venom was drawn out. The next morning Mr. Real, armed with ax and steel to the tree and on cutting out a big chip found a full-grown specimen of the terrible rattlesnake, with its rattle still "shouting" for life, while the terrified rabbit, which had crawled on the hollow past the snake, was still there.

Dr. Jeter, well known to Baptist throughout the United States, is dead. He was a native of Virginia and was pastor of various churches in the State, including the First Baptist Church of Richmond. From 1849 to 1852 he preached in St. Louis, but was recalled to Richmond, and in 1870 became senior editor of the Religious Herald. He has held several positions of prominence in connection with various institutions of learning, including the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky. At the instance of the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist convention, Dr. Jeter visited Italy some six years ago to supervise the mission work of the board in that land, and especially to provide a chapel for missionaries in Rome. As a writer Dr. Jeter possessed rare excellence. He was the author of various memoirs and religious works.

It is said there are now eight tanneries using the mineral process of tanning in Germany; their leather everywhere meets with approval. The leather is impervious to water, and its durability is said to be much greater than that of leather as ordinarily tanned.

For example, a pair of shoes were made, the right with a mineral tanned sole, the left tanned. These shoes were subjected to natural wear, and when the left was worn out the right sole was uninjured. Trials made by the spinning mills of Tungst & Co.

of Biederkopf, within the past year, showed that belts of mineral tanned leather were not only better, but 20 per cent cheaper, than others. It is worthy of note that this method of

Dr. Heinzerling is radically different from Prof. Klapp's method of iron tanning, and presents none of the objections which make the latter unsatisfactory.

The east coast of Hudson's Bay is reported to be undergoing very considerable changes in its level. Since the posts of the Hudson's Bay company were established at the mouths of the various rivers, there has been an increasing difficulty in approaching them with large crafts; and this elevation is estimated to amount to between five and ten feet within the last one hundred years. The same changes have been observed off the west coast of the bay, at the mouth of the Nelson and Hayes rivers, near which is an island called Mile Lands, now several feet above high water, which, within the memory of man, was always submerged at flood tide.

The noblest spirits are those which turn to heaven, not by the hour of sorrow, but in that of joy; like the lark, they wait for the clouds to disperse, that they may soar up into their native element.—Richter.

Dissolution Notice.

The partnership heretofore existing between Joseph W. C. Jones and John H. Mills has this day been dissolved. Joseph W. Jones will continue the business of stone mason as heretofore. Feb. 19, 1880. JOSEPH W. JONES.
